

Across

- 3. Before someone is diagnosed with type 1 diabetes, they might be feeling this a lot.
- 6. This tasty treat can also be used to help someone when their glucose levels are too low.
- 9. This is the name for a high glucose level, usually defined as 10mmol/L or more.
- 11. This organ should release insulin, which allows the glucose to enter cells.
- A device which delivers insulin by injection. Some are prefilled with insulin and are disposable.
- 14. A device that is worn by someone to read glucose levels and can be scanned with a reader or phone.

Down

- 1. This is the name for a low glucose level, usually defined as 3.9mmol/L or less.
- 2. The process by which the body develops antibodies (like when fighting an infection) but they are directed against some part of the body's own tissues.
- 4. A simple sugar that is absorbed through the gut and is an essential energy source for the body.
- 5. The main source of energy that comes from healthy foods such as bread, pasta, milk and fruit.
- 7. A device which delivers insulin through a small tube placed under the skin.
- 8. A chemical which is made and stored in a particular part of the body (insulin is an example of this).
- 10. If someone's glucose levels are too low, they might feel like this.
- 12. The small tube inserted in the skin to deliver insulin via a pump.

Across: 3.Thirsty, 6.JellyBaby, 9.Hyperglycaemia, 11.Pancreas, 13.InsulinPen, 14.Sensor. Down: 1.Hypoglycaemia, 2.Auto-Immunity, 4.Glucose, 5.Carbohydrates, 7.InsulinPump, 8.Hormone, 10.Anxious, 12.Cannula.

